Contact between people speaking different languages can have a wide variety of outcomes. In some cases only a few words are borrowed; in others whole new languages may be formed. The results of such contact differ according to several factors, including the length and intensity of contact between the groups; the types of social, economic, and political relationship between them; the functions which communication between them must serve; and the degree of similarity between the languages they ...

Languages in Contact | Linguistic Society of America

Language contact often occurs along borders or as a result of migration. The transfer of words or phrases can be one-way or two-way. Chinese has influenced Japanese, for instance, though the reverse has not largely been true. Two-way influence is less common and is typically restricted to specific regions.
