Not as fun or stimulating as the first, until near the end, but the concepts developed here are pretty important for the good stuff in Vol. 3. In short, this volume moves outside the social relations of the factory and examines the process of exchange in capitalist society and how reproduction can actually carry on.

Capital, Vol. 2: The Process of Circulation of Capital by ...

Capital as Process. Rather than a preexisting money fund, or a material factor of production, capital is best understood as a particular kind of economic process. Capital is property capitalized—a legal asset assigned a pecuniary value in expectation of its capacity to yield a likely future pecuniary income.

While the basic process of production might be unaltered, there are two distinct characteristics of the process as a whole. First, the capitalist controls the labor of the worker whose labor they have purchased. Second, the product that results from the labor is not the property of the worker but instead the property of the capitalist.
