Melancholia (from Greek: μέλαινα χολή melaina chole "black bile", "blackness of the bile" also Latin lugere lugubriousness to mourn, Latin morosus moroseness of self-will or fastidious habit, and old English wist wistfulness of intent or saturnine) is a mental condition characterized by extreme depression, bodily complaints, and sometimes hallucinations and delusions.

Melancholia - Wikipedia

The term "melancholia" is one of the oldest terms used in psychology. It has been around since Hippocrates introduced it in the fifth century B.C., and it means "black bile" in Greek. The translation is fitting because Hippocrates believed that an excess of black bile, one of what he labeled "The Four Humours," caused melancholia.

Lars von Trier's "Melancholia" opens with music from Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde," mourning and apocalyptic, and disturbing images of a world not right. A woman dressed as a bride runs through a forest whose branches seem to grab at her in a Disney nightmare. She floats in a pond, holding flowers, like Ophelia. Another woman makes her way with a child over marshy grass that sucks at her.

Melancholia movie review & film summary (2011) | Roger Ebert

Melancholia the planet is like the juggernaut of the west that came down upon and wiped out indigenous peoples everywhere, including the native american indians, and replaced their way of life with something else: a materialist dream, rooted in a blind industrialism that is ultimately destroying the planet and that leads to the ugly social dysfunction manifested during the wedding party.

Lars von Trier's "Melancholia": A Discussion | Film Quarterly

It appeared that all mankind had a knowledge, unacknowledged and despised by me, of the meaning of life. It appeared that reasonable knowledge does not give the meaning of life, but excludes life: while the meaning attributed to life by millions of people, by all humanity, rests on some despised pseudo-knowledge.
