Answer: There are some cicadas (erroneously called locusts) that appear on a 13-year or 17-year cycle, but these may not necessarily be the ones you remember swarming in Kentucky. Locust swarms occur when this grasshopper-type species (there are more than 1,500 varieties) are in "marginal regions" that don't offer them suitable habitat. This can occur when they've spent too much time in nice places and their numbers have outgrown the space.
